September Newsletter

Short days are coming!

The month so far has been a rollercoaster ride. I've continued to work with my editor, found amazing ways of looking at my book and joined a few additional outlets of social media.

There are now ten IGTV posts and I hope to continue the trend as the weeks go by. I intend to correct that mistake immediately.

I'm looking into MailChimp and am pleased to see some of the templates look similar to the newsletter I currently have. (Yay!) 😊

I've now joined Vimeo, Ello, Gab, Minds.com and

I am planning on joining the InkTober challenge and hope to find a new outlet for the creative bug in me.

Editing has been slow on my part and I blame no one but me for the delay. Work has been a monster for weeks, but I still go home at the same time, visit the gym and hike on a regular basis. Editing should not be put aside as much as I've done and I

Dailyflash. Some have been looking promising for connecting with others and a couple are looking like they may go the way of Google plus. (so sad to let that one go) Either way, I'm still doing my best to share the pictures I take and the words of wisdom I find at the close of each day. Hopefully, my words will find those who need them and share them in turn. 😊

Fave Posts

The latest FB Fave is from a question addressing the why of what I do and what kind of outlook I hold in what I do in my writing. We all have reasons for our choices. Creatives have them in a great variety of choices and I am always happy to answer the reasons behind my passions. 😊

Question: What is your "unique viewpoint" as an author? What sets you apart from the crowd that your readers love?

My Answer: My view is one built from a lifetime of stories read, trials lived and lessons learned. Some trials continue even today but the stories no longer exist only in the books I read or shows I watch. They now take shape in my mind and wait to be shared with the world.

What happened?

As many have been saying, it looks as if Amazon will soon close down CreateSpace and take on the publishing of paper and e-books without an intermediary.

Change is always hard and I hope to get through this one without too much struggle.

Onwards! 😊

My Vlog this month on a topic most writers dread. Writer's Block. I also put together a different banner for my web site to showcase the video.

I like it. Not too different and just enough of a change to let anyone know that the video is of me as a comic character.

Ah, the good old days of writing comic strips. Good times. 😊

My Instagram fave this month is one with a turtle pic I took this weekend. (I love turtles!) Did I mention I went to the zoo? So much beauty and so few ever see it. It's good to share. 😊

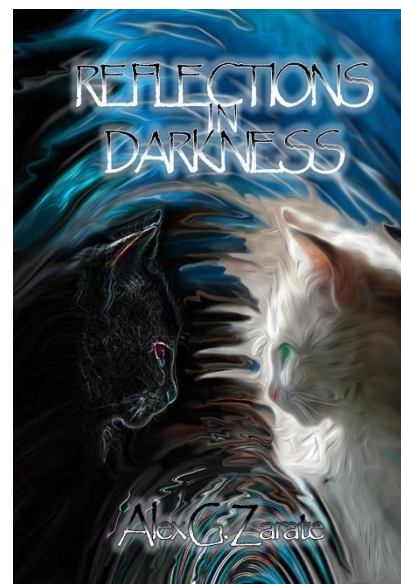

Neither land, sea or air have kept dreamers from pushing boundaries in the world because to a dreamer, possibilities have no limits. Onwards! +

The promotional world is vast and complex but I am now diving into it. That's right, soon I will be burning money faster than a sailor on leave and attaining the status of Bestselling Author of The Universe before long. It may not happen overnight, but with luck, the pennies I rub for luck will do the trick.

Onwards! 😊
